Prof. Goddard Within Month Will Fire Experimental Missile to Establish Principle He Has Evolved

Retarded by Scant Funds

All That Is Needed, He Says, Is a Projectile That Can Go Seven Mi'es a Second

Special Dispatch to The Tribune WORCESTER, Mass., Sept. 19.—Pro-mor Robert H. Goddard, of Clark Colege, designer of a rocket which he be-Heves will reach the moon, said to-day that within a month he would send up his first experimental missile. Alhough it would shoot only a mile or twe, Professor Goddard said, it would smonstrate the principle upon which is dream was founded.

"As soon as I can accumulate funds necessary to complete my plans I'll leanch my great rocket," said Professor Geddard. "This first one is worthless, except to demonstrate what might be done.
"For approximately $15,000 more I could construct a rocket that would shoot to an altitude where data above the reach of sounding balloons might

"It would cost a fortune to make a recket to hit the moon. The great pity is that I cannot commercialize my idea. If I could have promised a 100 per cent return in forty-five days I'd have been financed long ago. But unfortunately the proposed rocket is worth little save to the world of science. It is invaluable, of course, for meteorological inquiry and will undoubtedly be of practical value to astronomers.

"Science has established this postulate, that a projectile could escape from the earth forever—that is, it could overcome the force of gravitation—if it could attain a speed of seven miles a second. Of course, that is faster than can be observed with the naked eye. It haffles contemplation.

"Yet the only possible way of reachis the moon is a simple one offer all

Tet the only possible way of reaching the moon is a simple one, after all. My sky-high rocket will contain many separate power charges. Starting from the ground at a speed progressing to 1,000 feet a second, the first explosion will be rapidly succeeded by others, each successive discharge giving an additional speed of 8,000 feet a second. The great scientific value of the little rocket which I intend to shoot from Worcester lies in the possibility of sending recording apparatus to extreme altitudes within the earth's atmembalere. My rocket will come down ere. My rocket will come down where it goes up.

"I should like to propose, if the work is of sufficient interest, the raising of $100,000 by popular subscription, to be used by the Smithsonian Institute in undertaking a stupendous exploration of the atmosphere."
